

Featured Tune: "Reminiscing" from WE ARE AVA

reviews

WE ARE AVA's track "Reminiscing" is a stunning blend of nostalgic lyricism and vibrant synthpop energy. Taken from their sophomore album Radix, the song captures the bittersweet experience of revisiting memories and pondering the elusive "what ifs" of a past relationship.

From the opening notes, the electronic soundscape immediately draws you in. The trio layers driving beats with atmospheric synths, creating a lush, dreamy backdrop that feels both expansive and intimate. The production is polished yet emotive, striking the perfect balance between modern electronic pop and heartfelt storytelling.

Kim's vocals are the emotional core of the song. Her voice, at once tender and commanding, effortlessly conveys the ache of looking back on love lost. Lines like, "Being back here got me reminiscing, got me thinking about what could have been," feel raw and personal, pulling the listener into a vivid emotional journey. Her delivery adds an extra layer of vulnerability, making each word hit harder.

The lyrics are a standout feature, beautifully capturing the complexity of regret and reflection. Phrases like "Jaded hearts are second parts" and "You were such a piece of work, yet a piece of art" showcase the band's knack for poetic, evocative songwriting. The themes of ego, pride, and missed opportunities resonate universally, making the song deeply relatable.

What sets "Reminiscing" apart is its ability to explore pain without becoming overly somber. The upbeat tempo and driving rhythm inject a sense of forward motion, giving the track an uplifting edge despite its melancholic undertones.

WE ARE AVA has crafted a song that's as introspective as it is sonically captivating. "Reminiscing" is a standout track that showcases the band's growth and ability to weave profound emotion into their infectious synthpop sound.
